

Country: France

Committee: United Nations Security Council

Agenda: Environmental Problems

France recognizes that environmental problems pose serious threats to global peace and security. Issues such as climate change, deforestation, pollution, and the loss of biodiversity increase instability by worsening poverty, food insecurity, and competition over natural resources. These challenges can lead to conflicts, especially in fragile and developing regions. France believes that environmental protection is not only an environmental issue but also a security concern that must be addressed by the United Nations Security Council.

France strongly supports international cooperation and multilateral action to combat environmental problems. As a leading advocate of the Paris Agreement, France encourages all nations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and invest in renewable energy sources. France also emphasizes the importance of climate adaptation strategies, disaster risk reduction, and sustainable development. Additionally, France supports providing financial aid, technology transfer, and capacity-building to developing countries so they can effectively address environmental challenges.
