AGENDA - DISCUSSING WAYS TO PROMOTE “SOLIDARITY, EQUALITY AND SUSTAINABILITY”

Position Paper – Brazil

Standing together matters more now than ever. With gaps growing between rich and poor, storms worsening, forests shrinking, Brazil sees clear paths forward through shared effort instead of rivalry. Big challenges call for joint thinking, especially inside groups like the G20 where decisions shape worldwide outcomes. Not just a participant, Brazil brings unique strengths - vast ecosystems, deep-rooted cultures, fresh energy - to help build fairness across nations. Stability does not come by chance; it grows when values like balance, care, and fairness take root in policy. What happens next depends on choices made today, grounded in real change, not promises.

Brazil stands behind teamwork among nations, where every country moves forward together. One rule matters: respect each nation's right to choose its own path. Progress should reach everyone, not just the wealthy or powerful. Poorer countries deserve a fair chance. Least-developed ones need extra attention. Shared growth is the goal. This way, no one gets left behind.

Brazil sees shared responsibility among nations as key to making world systems work better. When it comes to problems like climate shifts, disease outbreaks, hunger crises, or shaky economies, borders offer no real protection. One country acting alone simply lacks the reach needed here. Cooperation becomes unavoidable when threats move freely across continents.

Brazil pushes for stronger ties between nations - fair play matters. Connections grow when richer and poorer countries meet as equals. Trust builds slowly, yet it can spread fast. Partnerships work best without hidden agendas. Mutual respect? That keeps things moving forward.

Fairer medicine access begins when nations share knowledge instead of holding back. Vaccines reach more people once borders stop blocking supplies. Stronger clinics emerge where experts work together across continents.

Changing global money systems so poorer nations have more voice. When emergencies hit, support can adapt quickly. Power shifts slowly, but pressure grows. Rules made long ago no longer fit today's needs. Some countries still carry less weight than others. Adjustments could balance influence more fairly. Flexibility often lacks when it matters most.

Brazil sees real unity not just in words, but showing up through fair burdens shouldered together, sharing know-how openly, backed by funding where it's needed most.

Position Paper

Still today, gaps in wealth and opportunity weigh heavily around the world. From its own past, Brazil knows what it means to face those divides head on. Programs that support basic needs have shaped a different path forward there. Education efforts aiming at fairness play a role too. Tackling deep poverty became part of broader change over time.

Focused on fairness, Brazil urges the G20 to back growth that brings real jobs while narrowing the gap between rich and poor.

When girls learn, lead, or build careers, fairness grows. A chance to study opens doors they can walk through without asking. In meetings or offices, their voices matter just as much. Progress shows up quietly when one woman speaks where silence once lived.

Fair tech access begins when every nation can afford tools plus training. Getting devices matters just as much as learning how to use them does.

Brazil puts weight on honoring different cultures while also standing up for groups often left out - like native populations - who deserve a place at the table when worldwide choices are made. Their presence matters just as much as any other voice shaping outcomes.

Brazil holds a vast stretch of the Amazon, placing it at the heart of Earth's ecological balance. Because of this weighty position, efforts lean on guarding nature while still moving economies forward.

Brazil steps forward with a call for robust global teamwork on climate issues, recognizing that shared duties still differ among nations. While fairness matters, joint efforts must rise. Not every country carries the same burden, yet progress needs unity. Responsibility shifts, but action does not wait.

Money flowing into cleaner power sources lately. Farms now work with nature more than before. Machines that help the planet are getting built faster. Some countries lead, others follow quietly behind.

Help with money and technology lets poorer nations shift to cleaner energy while still growing their economies.

What Brazil points out is how guarding nature mustn't block progress in poorer countries; instead, it could open paths toward lasting advancement.

Brazil stands clear on one point: the G20 should act first, showing how unity works in practice. When problems cross borders, answers must come together - fairness guiding each step. Cooperation grows stronger when trust is built through shared effort. Because every nation counts, decisions need space for everyone's voice. Resilience shows up where inclusion takes root. A planet protected begins with choices made today. Multilateralism gains power when actions match words.

Brazil keeps pushing for honest talks, joint effort, one step at a time. Moving forward means acting now without stealing from tomorrow. Together, nations stand stronger when they work side by side. Real results show up where people choose collaboration over conflict.
