Position Paper – Brazil

Introduction

The Federative Republic of Brazil firmly believes that solidarity, equality, and sustainability are not optional ideals but essential pillars for global stability and long-term development. In an era marked by economic disparities, climate crises, and social inequalities, the world must move beyond isolated national interests and work collectively. As one of the world's largest emerging economies and a nation rich in biodiversity and cultural diversity, Brazil understands both the challenges and responsibilities of balancing economic growth with social justice and environmental protection. The G20 provides a crucial platform to address these interconnected issues through cooperation and shared responsibility.

Relation of Brazil to the Agenda

Brazil's national development has long been shaped by the pursuit of inclusive growth and environmental preservation. With a diverse population and significant socio-economic contrasts, Brazil recognizes the importance of solidarity in ensuring that development benefits all sections of society. Brazil emphasizes reducing inequality through access to education, healthcare, and employment opportunities, particularly for marginalized communities. Furthermore, as home to the Amazon rainforest—one of the world's most vital ecosystems—Brazil acknowledges its global role in promoting sustainability and combating climate change.

Previous Actions Taken by Brazil and the International Community

Brazil has implemented several policies aimed at reducing inequality, such as conditional cash transfer programs, inclusive education initiatives, and efforts to strengthen labor rights. In terms of sustainability, Brazil has invested in renewable energy sources like hydropower, wind, and biofuels, making its energy matrix one of the cleanest among major economies. Internationally, Brazil has actively participated in climate agreements such as the Paris Agreement and supported South-South cooperation to promote sustainable development among developing nations. Brazil also advocates reforming global financial institutions to ensure fair representation and equitable access to resources for developing countries.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Brazil strongly urges G20 member states to adopt a people-centered approach that integrates solidarity, equality, and sustainability into economic policymaking. Brazil proposes strengthening multilateral cooperation, increasing climate finance for developing nations, promoting fair trade, and investing in green technologies that generate inclusive employment. Solutions such as social protection systems, sustainable agriculture, and renewable energy—successfully practiced in Brazil—can be adapted globally. Through collective commitment and shared accountability, the G20 can pave the way for a more just, inclusive, and sustainable future for all nations.

Thank you.
